History

The Michigan Cyclist was begun in Grand Rapids, Michigan during a time when the interest in bicycles for recreation, sport and transportation was widespread. The Cyclist published the news of developments in bicycles, their parts and accessories, and prices, bicycle racing, both sprints and distance, and bicycle touring. The Cyclist served as a clearing house for West Michigan as well as national manufacturers of bicycle parts and bicycles. Competition was fierce among local, regional and national magazines on cycling and the trade, and after a brief existence, The Michigan Cyclist Publishing Company was forced out of business.

Scope and Content

The collection consists of volumes 3 to 8, 1894-1897. Feature articles on races, racers, and improvements in the machines are augmented by informative advertisements by bicycle manufacturers, equipment suppliers, and Michigan retailers. Photographs and illustrations are a major feature.
