Biography

George Everett Fitch (1868-1941), photographer of Grand Rapids, Michigan scenes, was the son of George Clay Fitch, local wagon maker, and Cadette Everett, daughter of Franklin Everett. Fitch graduated from local schools and from the University of Michigan in 1892. A real estate dealer, Fitch was also an avid amateur historian.

Fitch was a charter member of the Grand Rapids Camera Club and an avid canoeist. He used his photographic talents to duplicate historic views of Grand Rapids located in the Grand Rapids Public Library and the Grand Rapids Public Museum and other private sources. In 1925 he published Old Grand Rapids with includes many of these images. A copy of this book has been added to this collection (Dec. 2003).

Arrangement

Fitch numbered his images and that numbering scheme has been retained. Some numbers are missing, other numbers have been used multiple times, with an alphabetical extension, e.g. #166a. This alternative number may indicate a variant image or a different image. The reason for this alternative numbering is not known.

Description

The image numbers are summarized in the Folder Summaries section below.

Following this are 3 separate indexes:

- 1) a numerical list for each item, with a brief description
- 2) an alphabetical list by subjects or key terms
- 3) a separate chronological index [not all date known]

Full item level descriptions are not available at this time. This means that that actual visual contents of many items initially described as “Grand Rapids views”, is not given.

Missing items

Some numbers are missing from the numerical list of photos below. This means that the item (image unknown) was either never given to the library, or has disappeared over the years. This finding aid inventory is believed to be accurate as of the 1986 archival processing of the collection. No list of images is known to have been provided by Fitch.

Scope and Content

The collection documents Grand Rapids scenes from the late 1850s into the 1920s. The images include street scenes, panoramas, buildings, logging activities, the fire of 1873 and the log jam of 1883. Included are original photos of Fitch family members.

See the alphabetical and chronological indexes at the end of this finding aid.
