| Abstract         | The Grand Rapids Furniture Designers Association (Grand Rapids, Michigan) is an organization of furniture designers dedicated to maintaining high standards in the design profession. The collection contains materials from the group's inception in 1917 through the 1990s. The bulk of the collection is scrapbooks and the magazine and newspaper articles provide access to locally printed design literature. The materials show how the designers influenced the furniture market and depict styles and trends. Photographs depict business and professional activities of the membership, but primarily their annual dinners and picnics. Some biographical information on local furniture designers is also included. |

Biographical/Historical note

The Grand Rapids Furniture Designers Association was formally organized October 25, 1917. The group's purpose was to help maintain high standards in the furniture designing profession and to promote and sponsor educational development in its field. To this end the Association helped found the Kendall School of Design in 1928, where a number of the Association members taught classes, and which is still functioning today. Members of the Association were credited with helping to set industry styles, trends and designs.

Lying dormant during the late part of World War I and the totality of World War II, the Association was reorganized during both 1920 and 1949. Membership was limited to those professionally engaged in the art of furniture design. At its inception, membership was also limited to those designers who resided in the Grand Rapids area. As some members work locale changed, in later years this rule was not enforced. The Association met four times a year, three of the meetings consisting of dinners followed by business sessions. They also engaged in a number of annual outdoor outings and other events, such as the annual December Ladies Parties at the Peninsular Club.

The Association elected four officers annually. The group's prestige can be illustrated in that President Hoover in 1925 appointed several members of the Association to report on the Exposition of Modern Decorative and Industrial Arts in Paris. The group was active in promoting knowledge of furniture design and the industry and also in protecting designer's copyrights. The collection dates to the early 1970s, but the Grand Rapids Furniture Designers Association continues in 2008.

Scope and Contents note

The collection provides insight into the interests, activities, and business that the Association dealt in. Grand Rapids, Michigan is historically known as the "Furniture City" and for the high quality of design from the professionals who have been part of this Association.

The collection contains materials from the group's inception in 1917 through the 1990s. The bulk of the collection is scrapbooks and the magazine and newspaper articles provide access to locally printed design literature. The materials show how the designers influenced the furniture market and depict styles and trends. Photographs depict business and professional activities of the membership, but primarily their annual dinners and picnics. Some biographical information on local furniture designers is also included. A name index to scrapbook pages, using the inverted form of the name, is available for some scrapbooks.

Related Archival Materials note

The Furniture Design Book Collection is the primary collection related to the Grand Rapids Furniture Designers Association. It is housed in its own room, within Grand Rapids History & Special Collections, at the Grand Rapids Public Library. The collection was originally created by and for the local furniture designers, who had their own space within the public library building. Today, the primary users of the collection are students of the neighboring Kendall College, as well as academics and interested others.

The Library continues to build this collection, adding new national and international titles from the published design literature, which occasionally includes information on Grand Rapids companies. The books in the collection are included in the GRPL Library catalog accessible through the website <http://www.grpl.org>.

Use of the collection requires a photo ID, such as a driver's license, along with other restrictions typical of the use of rare materials.

Most of the historical collections related to and from local Grand Rapids, or other area, furniture companies are located in the GRPL Archives or at the Public Museum of Grand Rapids or at other area institutions, such as the Holland Historical Trust. See staff for assistance in accessing those collections.
